Stability of your Mission Critical services is not limited to technical considerations.

Stability of your Mission Critical services depends upon the stability of your vendor and their ability to remain in business. While the buzzword during the past five years has been, "We 're going to IPO" FNSI 's management deliberately focused upon the fundamentals that form a solid business foundation and they continue to operate the company with a bottom line centric agenda. FNSI 's management resisted the IPO craze of the 90's forecasting that no economy could indefinitely support the substantial cash burns that many companies were developing. Today the evidence is clear. The public and private equity markets have pulled back and many of those companies that became dependent upon funding their deficit with equity and debt capital are suddenly unstable. FNSI a privately held corporation continues to fund its operations from earnings. Company management does not focus solely on revenues but rather the entire income statement and financial picture. FNSI has conducted an annual audit of its financial statements each year. FNSI 's independent auditors (KPMG, LLP) have issued an unqualified (clean) opinion each year

The dependability of your mission critical services is dependant upon the stability of your vendor.
